THE RIGHT OF WAY.

How an tagital-man Will Kirk and tirent Till He trains His Point.

This is a true story, and after that is to tended to illustrate a chora-teriors of the English people It shows, I think, to what lengths in Englishman will go to say, "Oh, what is the tree!" or, "Never mind," but he will inven in time that the reason, the Englishman has better roads and better streets and better protection for his life and property is because he "makes a kick about it" and protests and growls and is generally disagreeable. until be gets what he wants. Equally, strong with his desire to have his rights is the Engitzhman's deterence for the rights of others. He shows his deforence by respecting the English law, which makes those rights good. There was a young woman in Engined who told me that she and seven or eight other young people had tramped in single file through a gentle man's dining from one evening, while he and his questa were at dinner, in order to establish a right of way. The English man had built his house on a meadow directly across a pathway that had been used for centuries, and once a year the young people of the neighboring estates marched scross his lown and up his stairs and through his house in order that he should remember that the right of way still ex-She was an exceedingly shy and well bred young person and of a family quite as old as the right of way, but it ap parently did not strike her that she was rade in tramping through a stranger's house, or indeed that she was doing any thing but a public duty. And the interesting point of her story to me was that the English householder, instead of get ting a winchester and driving the young tresspassers off of his lawn, should have had so full an appreciation of their right to question his right that he simply bit his lips and went to law about it, There was an Irishman in the same county who lived in a small cottage on an estate and who was in the habit of cross ing from it to another through the gate way of a very distinguished and noble gentleman. He had done this for 20 years, and when the noble gentleman came into some more more and hung and hung was a series of the property of the pr way of a very distinguished and noble gentleman. Found the Authority.

A fond mother went into a book store down town and walked up and down the sisles closely scanning the titles of the books. At last she found the title desired and took down the book. 'Is this a good book?" she demanded of

"It is an excellent book, madam, and the only copy we have left," replied the clerk as he named the price and wrapped

"How fortunate I am to have secured it then!" the delighted woman exclaimed. My son is just crazy over that game and I wanted to get a good authority on it so that he could learn to play it properly."

A sickly, faraway light was in the salesman's eyes as he handed his customer her copy of Charles Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth."-New York Herald.

He Made the Bishop Sit Down. Prompted by the feeling that it was his duty, the bishop remonstrated with one of his clergy for attending a local hunt.

"Well, your lordship," replied the offender, "I really do not see that there is any more barm in hunting than in going to a bull."

"I presume," answered the bishop,"that you refer to having seen my name down among those who attended Lady Somer ville's ball. But I assure you that through out the whole evening I was not once in the same room as the dancers." That, my lord, is exactly how I stand Irving and Miss Terry's Dress. They are telling the story in San Francisco, where Mr. Irving and Miss Terry had unusual social attentions, that at a dinner given in their honor by Mr. and Mrs. De Young Miss Terry was unable to be present on account of her neuralgia. This Mr. Irving kindly explained. I assure you," murmured Mr. Irving to his hostess, "Miss Terry is most disappointed, and she had a new dress, too, for the occasion." Then a happy thought struck him "But here is the dress. Stand up, Edith, and show them all your moth er's new brocade."-New York Sun.
